

Welcome to Alpheios

Your resource for evidence-based, open-source software that supports the worldwide study of classical languages and literatures.

1320
Max-width

Landing Page Layout Details

12 Column Grid
20px gutter, 1320px max width

Decorative Content Wrapper
Max-width (1100 px)

Main Content Container
Max-width (875 px)

1100
Max-width

875
Max-width

Comprehensive support for reading classical languages online.

Read classical literature in its original language with contextual aids and resources that help you learn as you read.

We are currently supporting Greek, Latin, Arabic, and Persian. Tools are available on desktop and mobile.

Get Started Now

General Features

- Interact with words while reading texts online.
- Quickly access short definitions and full definitions.
- Examine inflection tables.
- Review grammar to better understand the language.

Learn more about our features →

C. IVLI CAESARIS COMMENTARIORVM DE BELLO CIVILI LIBER PRIMVS

[1] Litteris C. Caesaris consulibus redditis aegre ab his imperatibus est summa tribunorum plebis contenti recitarentur; ut vero ex litteris ad senatum referatur, impetrari non potuit. Referunt consules de re publica [in] Lentulus consul senatus rei publicae se non defutare posse, si audacter ac fortiter sententias dicere vel respiciunt aliquid eius gratiam sequantur, ut superioribus fecerint temporibus, se sibi consulium capturum neque docimur. Quod si habere se quicquid ad Caesaris grauius que amissum recipimus. In eisdem sententiis loqui esse in animo rei publicae non deesse, si seruatis segni. Et si auctoritate aliqua agat lenitus, recipi quam etiam auxiliis senatus implorandum.

[2] Haec, &c. proposita oratione, quod sententia in Alpheios consulibus redditis aegre ab his imperatibus est summa tribunorum plebis contenti recitarentur; ut vero ex litteris ad senatum referatur, impetrari non potuit. Referunt consules de re publica [in] Lentulus consul senatus rei publicae se non defutare posse, si audacter ac fortiter sententias dicere vel respiciunt aliquid eius gratiam sequantur, ut superioribus fecerint temporibus, se sibi consulium capturum neque docimur. Quod si habere se quicquid ad Caesaris grauius que amissum recipimus. In eisdem sententiis loqui esse in animo rei publicae non deesse, si seruatis segni. Et si auctoritate aliqua agat lenitus, recipi quam etiam auxiliis senatus implorandum.

Get Started with Alpheios

Alpheios Reader Tools (Desktop and Mobile)

Read provided texts using the Alpheios Reader for desktop and mobile. This version of the tools is built for you to use where ever you are, but only for texts that Alpheios provides.

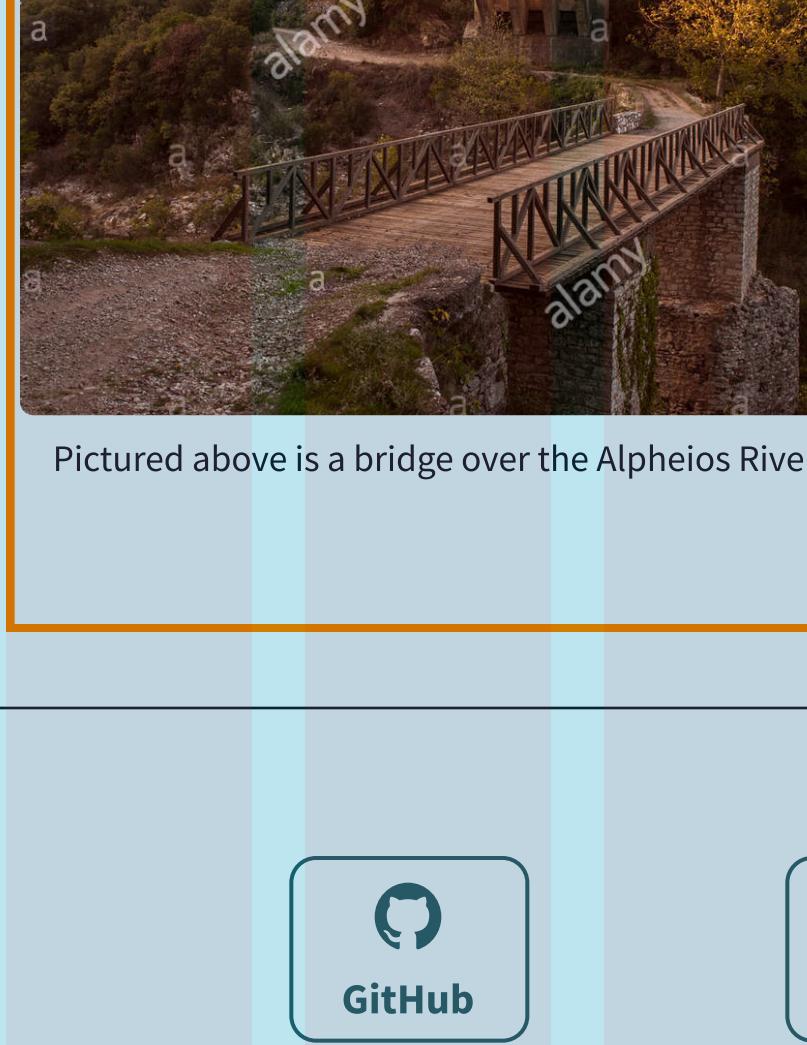

Start Reading

Alpheios Browser Extension (Desktop Only)

Read any text that you find online by installing our browser extension. The browser extension can only be used on desktop, but it is built so that you can use the Alpheios Reading Tools with any text online.

Install Browser Extension

About Alpheios

Pictured above is a bridge over the Alpheios River.

The Alpheios Project, Ltd. is a 501(c)(3) non-profit organization.

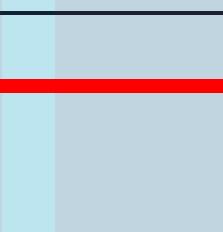

We aim to help people learn how to learn languages as efficiently and enjoyably as possible, and in a way that best helps them understand their own literary heritage and culture, as well as the literary heritage and culture of other peoples throughout history.

Our initial focus is on classical literature in languages no longer spoken, such as Latin and ancient Greek. The influence of these classics, like the river Alpheios, still runs like a subterranean stream deep beneath the contemporary world, as artists and thinkers continue to draw inspiration from them.

The river Alpheios is the inspiration for our name because of its mysterious way of moving below and above ground. Although it may disappear out of view, like classical languages do from the view of contemporary literary culture, it continues to flow and resurface. It is an influence that lives on even when out of sight. Such is the power of classical language.

Donate

Learn more about Alpheios →

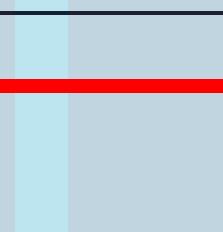

Github

Facebook

Twitter

Email